PARIS UNDER SIEGE

WRITTEN BY PETER FRIEL

What is now California was first settled by various Native American tribes before being explored by a number of European expeditions during the 16th and 17th centuries. It was then claimed by the Spanish Empire as part of Alta California in the larger territory of New Spain. Alta California became a part of Mexico in 1821 following its successful war for independence, but was ceded to the United States in 1848 after the Mexican-American War. The western portion of Alta California was organized as the State of California, which was admitted as the 31st state on September 9, 1850. The California Gold Rush starting in 1848 led to dramatic social and demographic changes..

I haven't decided if I feel betrayed... I know I feel duped. This is where I ended up after a process, one which began with embarrassment, and made its way through complexity. I've questioned most of my relationships as a result; what my expectations are of them? what parts of myself I sacrifice in them? and how I've reasoned or justified the more destructive ones?

But when I heard the news I was most of all embarrassed. It was only a few months before that he walked me into the Alexander Bonin opening, making sure to introduce me as a 'friend' to anyone greeting him. Those that acknowledged me did with a smirk, one that I now understand said 'oh, another one.' Later, he kissed me goodbye just a little too close to the mouth in the middle of Team Gallery.

many thanks

Hi

Hope you're well.

I've been receiving the magazine, and am very grateful. Liked the performance sway from May's issue... hot topic for sure.

I see that Dan is writing for Toronto... has there been any expression of interest to have a regular writer from Vancouver?

Best,

It began pretty innocently: he sent me a wallet identical to his because I had complimented him on it. And of course the Artforums - which I now know is his signature move - but at the time seemed harmless and generous.

It was the sort of 'companionship' that I thought I needed after an abusive and humiliating relationship with J in 2010. Not only did it comfort me, but I felt at the time, protected me from J.

Now I understand J's psychopathic behaviour, the kind which there are other more appropriate networks of protection from, was not helped by him but matched.

Not trying to make excuses - I returned his 'friendship' as much as he sought out mine. But it does beg certain questions:

Why he wanted my 'friendship' in the first place?

Was he so well behaved in the beginning because he thought J and I were together?

(It's disturbing now to think that the relationship that I sought protection from, actually protected ME from him asking about my orgasms... right away).

This, our first lunch date, was really when it changed. I went to his office. He insisted on me seeing the view, but made me comfortable by asking an endless string of questions. I noticed this as a skill right away, flawlessly executed, as if he had a whole lifetime of practice at it.

He asked why I got into art. I told him that realistically it was because a boy that I liked when I was young told me that I was no good at it. He laughed and said "we'll sure show him."

He told me he had spoken to J at an opening and that J mentioned we broke up. He replied "I don't care, I still like her!"

I wonder if you had played your cards any different = a different outcome.

Or how one plays one cards doesn't matter, it's all about underlying structural integrity and high compatibility.

I want to think with you again your relationship with sex, what it is for you, it's different for you than others, but it's a conversation not an e-mail.

RICH N FAMOUS 2018 Q2

RICH N FAMOUS 2018 Q2

When I first heard I messaged my dear friend T in New York. He had come up in a conversation with T and a couple of others just a few months before, where T was a skeptic and I had defended him saying that there was nothing wrong with talking about sex, that shying away from it is a Victorian-Christian value – and I ‘preferred not to think of myself as so conservative.’ The conversation was whether or not it was appropriate that he had asked a young gallerist at Frieze one year earlier what she “looked for in a sexual partner?” (I think, I can’t remember exactly, but something along these lines). Everyone else thought that a man his age, in his position of power should not be asking - because asking was demanding - these things of young women.

I should never have admitted to him that my first orgasm happened by rubbing up against a teddy bear. I’m embarrassed. Honestly I don’t know why I did it, or how it ever got to that.

By the time I was having this conversation with T, I was so far along into a ‘friendship’ with him that the only way to not be victimized was to defend him.

Several times, I had been accused of looking for a shortcut with him. But that was never what it was going to be. Even when I did try to bring the conversation back to where it could help me, to get something out of him, some sort of direction within the NYC artworld, he always took the reins, because that was never where he wanted it to go.

Dear Kate,

I'd like to ask in a "dry spell" how often do you give yourself an orgasm and what you think about then but I fear it might be inappropriate in e-mail, I have a large curiosity, I'll save it for when I see you,

Yes I do hope to be in Venice, a decent chance.

There it is - shots fired. Not so inappropriate for email that he didn't ask.

Was it kinky for him to walk the line, wanting to know intimate details, but never breaching physicality?

Nietzsche says "Dionysian happiness" is achieved through the "pessimistic destruction of illusions." I neither believe him to be happy, nor without illusions, but I do believe this is what he told himself to work towards.

He miscalculated. Forgot who he was, and that the public position he occupied held him accountable, for his behavior with that power.

I can't remember how this last email was dealt with. I didn't respond over email, there's record of that. And I don't think we ever spoke about it in person.

Now I wonder why I allowed it. It was fun, it was funny?

He asked me everything; not just about my sex life. That did slip in, but so that in the context of the conversation it felt natural, and friendly - inappropriate, maybe - but exciting in its candor.

He is an 'old perv.' I did always say this when people asked about our 'friendship.'

-But why allow it with this concession even?

He was a powerful 'friend,' that I could be light with and about, but looking back through these emails, I feel unjustified behind that veneer.

Eventually it leveled out. He spoke openly about family, so as to do away with threatening intentions. He was harmless, just a keen observer and clever 'friend.'

I know why he thought he was this... He told me at a dinner at 'Ed's' in Berlin that he had organized one night:

When I arrived he had put place cards on the table, with me to his right, and a very beautiful girl that I had never met before on his left. Across from us at the table were several young people from the community, all who I knew well, and an older male artist whose name I don't remember. The unknown artist's face went red after just a couple of sips of wine and stayed that way the whole dinner - it felt like he didn't know why he was there.

He was pretty disappointed that the rest of us all knew each other. As he slumped over in the booth, leaning close to whisper/ask the standard questions "who was I fucking? Who did I have a crush on? Was it anyone sitting at the table?" He mentioned how cliquy it seemed like Berlin was...

Later, when everyone had had a few drinks...

Everyone except him. I never once remember him drinking.

He told me that he had been confronted about his 'close relationships' to young women. He said that his response to the confrontation was that "most people are too frightened by perceptions to form these bonds. I'm not afraid to really talk to women, the same way I'd talk to anyone, because I'm not worried about the dictates of professionalism. And so I don't miss out on having these relationships with a portion of the population that gets overlooked, but is TRULY interesting."

The darkest thought I've had since finding out, and I really fucking hope this isn't the case, is that our relationship may have paved a way for this behavior. There is a correlation between the timeframe when our 'friendship' really began to take shape and when he started sexually harassing magazine staff and young female artists.

- Did I enable him?

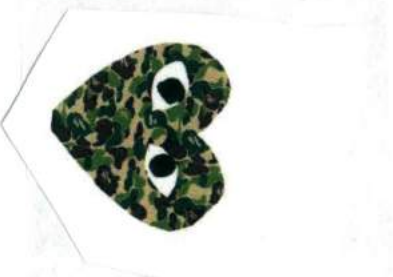

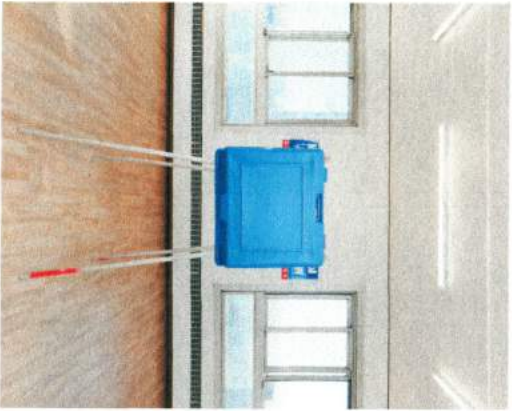

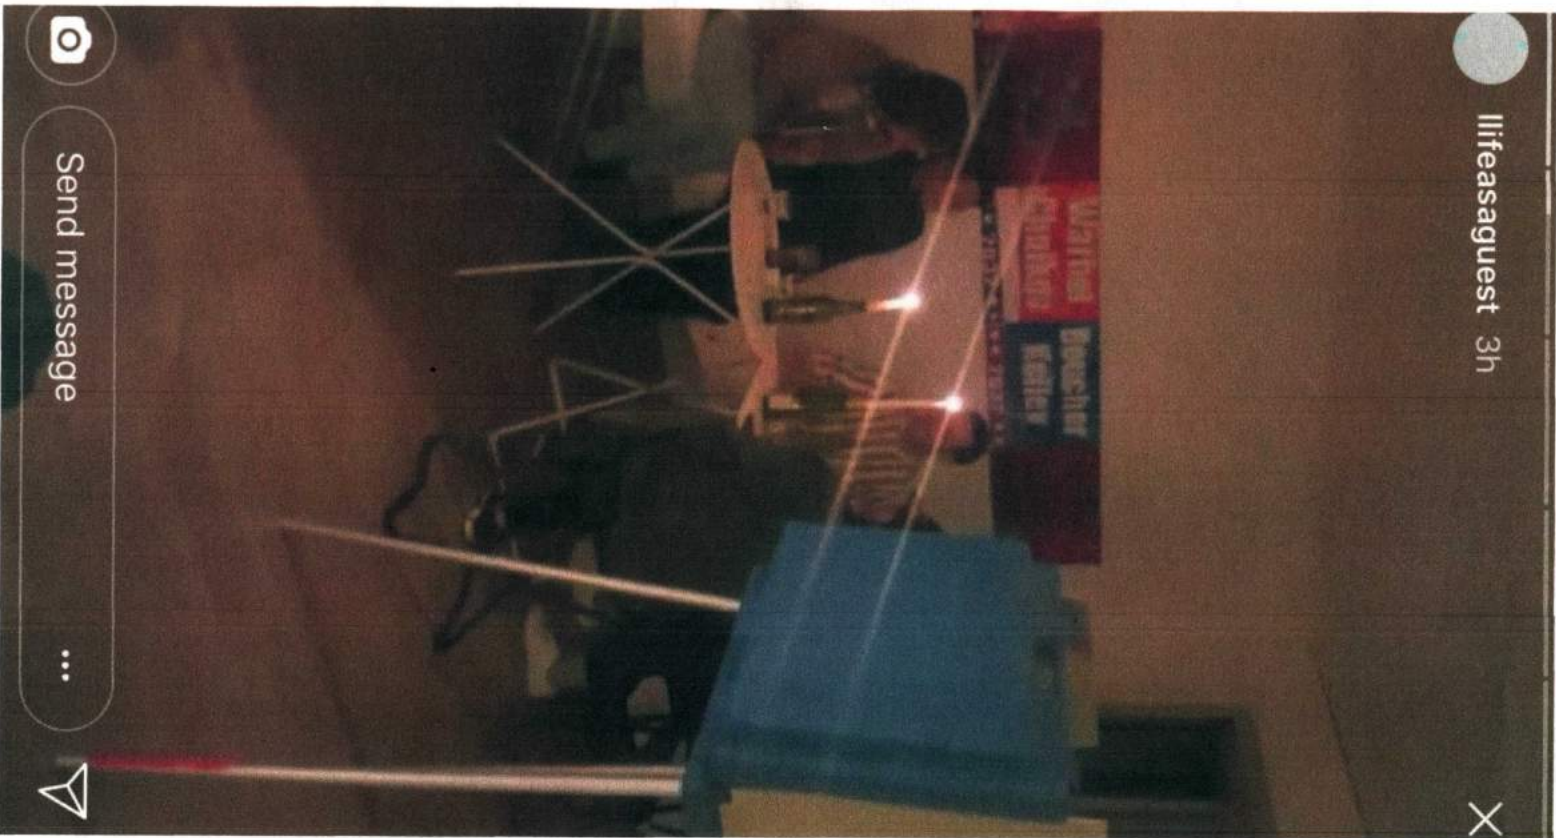

When I texted right after the news, T told me not to be embarrassed. She said that "people like this treat individuals differently, so that they can continue to get away with what they're doing."

They were kind and wise words... but he didn't treat me differently, really.

He just spread it out, over 8 years.

On the days just after the Million Man March many brothers had a victorious army returning home experience.

I knew by the smiling eyes of Black women that we had done something right. It was wonderful to return to the right on brother smiles and the I love you Black man grins of the African American women who had witnessed the March.

GALLERIES

Collection

Mike Amiri's first full-on presentation in Paris was something of a ceremony. Let's call it a rite of passage. In the ornate chapel of the Beaux-Arts, Amiri laid out hundreds of candles and flowers as the backdrop, with his models — both girls and boys — walking down a patchwork of oriental rugs to the rock soundtrack of California-based musician Goth Babe playing live in the background.

Inspired by watching "The Lost Boys" when he was a kid, Amiri channeled a glammed-up vampire theme. Kiefer Sutherland's toothy leer even featured on the glitter-clad T-shirts and was painted onto the back of a black biker jacket. "Vampires are fabulous," said Amiri backstage after the show.

"These are the kids I saw when I was too young to hang out with them," said the designer, explaining the inspiration. "It's about how do I take pieces of that and put it into my collection without having this overly done cinematic thing?"

JAMES TATE:

poems

Dream On

James Tate: photo by Dara Wier

Some people go their whole lives
without ever writing a single poem.
Extraordinary people who don't hesitate to cut somebody's heart or skull open.
They go to baseball games with the greatest of ease
and play a few rounds of golf as if it were nothing.
These same people stroll into a church
as if that were a natural part of life.
Investing money is second nature to them.
They contribute to political campaigns that have absolutely no poetry in them
and promise none for the future.
They sit around the dinner table at night
and pretend as though nothing is missing.
Their children get caught shoplifting at the mall
and no one admits that it is poetry they are missing.
The family dog howls all night,
lonely and starving for more poetry in his life.
Why is it so difficult for them to see that, without poetry, their lives are effluvial.
Sure, they have their banquets, their celebrations,
croquet, fox hunts, their sea shores and sunsets,
their cocktails on the balcony, dog races,
and all that kissing and hugging, and don't forget the good deeds, the charity work, nursing the baby squirrels all through the night,
filling the birdfeeders all winter,
helping the stranger change her tire.
Still, there's that disagreeable exhalation
from decaying matter, subtle but everpresent.
They walk around erect like champions.
They are smooth-spoken, urbane and witty.
When alone, rare occasion, they stare
into the mirror for hours, bewildered.
There was something they meant to say, but didn't:
"And if we put the statue of the rhinoceros
next to the tweezers,
and walk around the room three times,
learn to yodel, shave our heads, call our ancestors back from the dead—"
poetrywise it's still a bust, bankrupt.
You haven't scribbled a syllable of it.
You're a nowhere man misfiring
the very essence of your life, flustering nothing from nothing and back again.
The hereafter may not last all that long.
Radiant childhood sweetheart,

secret code of everlasting joy and sorrow,
fanciful pen strokes beneath the eyelids:
all day, all night meditation, knot of hope,
kernel of desire, pure ordinariness of life
seeking, through poetry, a benediction or a bed to lie down on, to connect, reveal, explore, to imbue meaning on the day's extravagant labor.
And yet it's cruel to expect too much.
It's a rare species of bird
that refuses to be categorized.
Its song is barely audible.
It is like a dragonfly in a dream—
here, then there, then here again, Low-flying Amber-wing darting upward
and then out of sight.
And the dream has a pain in its heart
the wonders of which are manifold, or so the story is told.

Well, this one was terrifying.

People were screaming in the streets.

Sure, it was beautiful, but far too beautiful.

It wasn't natural.

The colors were definitely not of this world,

Plutonian emeralds,

all swirling and churning, swabbing,

like it was playing with us,

like we were nothing,

as if our whole lives were a preparation for this,

this for which nothing could have prepared us

and for which we could not have been less prepared.

The mockery of it all stung us bitterly.

And when it was finally over

we whimpered and cried and howled.

And then the streetlights came on as always

WHAT DID I SEE?

What did I see in the eyes of the young Christian woman; just before the start of anti-drug march and rally? In her eyes I saw the hopeful, trusting look of a pre-emancipation slave girl as she faithfully followed a conductor on The Underground Railroad. Eye to eye, spirit to spirit, in such a brief moment; a warrior spirit, which had been long dead, forgotten and lost was reignited within me. The language of the heart of a modern day Nubian princess whispered. "Lead me Black Man, I am scared and I know not the way. Lead me Black Man, I will follow you."

Such was that wonderful, glorious, life-changing, unrepeatable moment...I just had to tell you about it. Because of that I submit for your inspection this gender-specific anthology of Great Woman Writers. No more said. Let the games begin!

We enter sacred cyberspace to celebrate the reawakening of the divine feminine. She is the Mother of the Universe, and she is us!

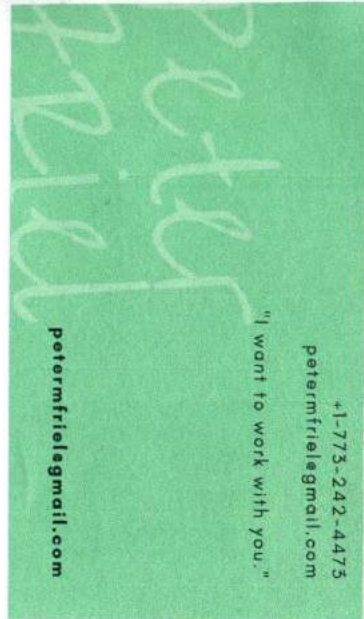

We missed her too long. Her loving heart was hidden from us, her womb's wisdom violated. The forward-march of progress plundered her hillsides, washed away her rich topsoil, choked her streams, and decimated her ancient forests, all to fuel a machine which promised comfort and now threatens destruction. Warfare, not sustenance, has become the chief work of the world.

She is the balance we have been seeking, her loving power the necessary counterpart to the uncontrolled male drive for her personal achievement and glory. Now we gather together at her Altar to attend the birthing of a new culture, one in which women are honored, and all life is held in sacred trust. We invoke her presence, and we ask that She may guide us out of the present danger to the safe territory of her garden, which is the promised land.

The flammable blankets
You know the type, sold to you
as the latest lifestyle trend or fad
You wrap yourself tightly up in them
It is only after you, your career, your life bursts into flames and everything you worked for is ashes;
your soul and being is scorched.
Only in hindsight do you realize that the blanket (lifestyle) was designed to self-destruct. Even worse is the fact that you bought the blanket on credit and you still owe a lot of money for that which caused you much misery and is now nothing but ashes and memories.

"Authentic rebellion has a grace. It does not scream, it is a state of mind," read the Valentino show notes.

For the past few seasons, Pierpaolo Piccioli has been exploring his vision of masculinity, one that casts off gender stereotypes to focus on individual expression. After cycling through punk and streetwear, his journey led him to post-punk performers such as Adam Ant, The Cure and Visage.

In line with his ethos of quiet rebellion, the New Romantic influences were subtle — a smudge of eyeliner here, a silver spike stud there. The latter sprouted up on the sleeves of a slim navy double cashmere coat, or a lightweight black parka. A leather jacket would have been too formulaic, Piccioli argued.

TO BE A WOMAN!

To be born a woman
is to be at the bottom of the wall, the abyss, the moat
around the walled city inhabited by Them, only by Them
who you'll have to charm, fool sell out to, flatter, humiliate yourself for, rebel against,
swim against the current of,
shout, shout, shout
until you split the stones escape through the cracks knock down the drawbridge,
destroy the walk,
get over the moat,
jump the abyss
throw yourself wingless
across the precipice driven by your own heart
supported by your own thoughts until your freed
from the horror of the void
you can only defeat
